Abstract

A systems operation module for a telecommunications system gathers all system change event code into one central location, and performs a series of checks and configuration modifications centrally. When the changes have been validated and the system updated, the systems operation module writes a new configuration to the system information database.